THE PYRAMID

A NEW ERA OF THE ATRIUM

THE PYRAMID X ME LONDON

A hotel defined by the pyramid—one of architecture's most stable and enduring forms.

Designed by Norman Foster, ME London is rooted in the triangle, a geometry expressed throughout the building—from marble detailing to corridor lighting.

In the atrium, these triangles converge—light, structure, and surface aligning into a calm, balanced, upward pyramid.

The image shows the interior of a large, hollow pyramid structure. The walls are made of dark, textured stone or marble, with visible veins and joints. The lighting is dim, with a warm, golden glow emanating from the base of the pyramid, creating a dramatic and mysterious atmosphere. The perspective is from within the structure, looking down towards the base.

‘The Pyramid Atrium is one of the most striking event spaces in London – a 100ft-high hollow, marble pyramid with roving light show across its three walls.’
